JANE ANDERSON

Attorney Advisor | AEquitas

Jane Anderson brings her expertise in prosecuting domestic violence, sexual violence, and human trafficking to her role as an Attorney-Advisor with AEquitas. Prior to joining AEquitas, Jane served as an Assistant State Attorney with Florida's Eleventh Judicial Circuit in Miami-Dade County. As a prosecutor, she tried many of the state's first human trafficking cases, including related sexual assault, child abuse, and money laundering crimes. In her role as a founding member of the Miami-Dade State Attorney's Human Trafficking Unit and Task Force, Jane developed policies and procedures to better identify and provide necessary services to trafficking victims as well as hold offenders accountable by using digital evidence and creative charging decisions. Before focusing on human trafficking, Jane served as the Chief of Litigation for the Misdemeanor Domestic Violence Unit where she trained new attorneys and oversaw the prosecution of domestic violence, stalking, and violations of civil protection orders. Throughout her career, she prosecuted felony-level crimes of all types, including homicide, kidnapping, sexual assault, and other violent crimes.

Jane leverages her experience in the courtroom and in developing policies and procedures to assist prosecutors and allied professionals in developing a victim-centered, offender-focused approach to cases of domestic violence, stalking, sexual violence, human trafficking, and elder abuse. She provides training and technical assistance related to investigations, case analysis, and trial strategy, as well as authors and develops resources, publications, and curricula.

Jane graduated cum laude with a Juris Doctor from American University, Washington College of Law after earning a Bachelor of Arts in History from the University of Washington in Seattle. Prior to her legal career, she lived and taught English in Bangkok, Thailand. Jane is based in the San Francisco Bay Area.

Understanding the Predatory Nature of Sexual Offenders

Decades of research have documented that sex offenders tend to be repeat offenders. Many sex offenders spend years targeting numerous victims, often perfecting their tactics through repetition and learning. This presentation will review the research on serial offending among sex offenders and then focus on the predatory strategies used by these offenders, particularly their use of grooming tactics to exploit the vulnerabilities of their victims.

Sexual Assault and Trauma – A Practical Application

This presentation will focus on how survivors of sexual assault cannot always provide the case facts in a way we investigators desire. The science is clear relative to how traumatic events affect brain function, habits, reflexes, and memory. However, the fog remains around law enforcement's response to sexual assault. The who, what, when and whys are not always available when a traumatic event occurs. This is not necessarily an indication of deception or untruthfulness, but more likely a clue that a traumatic event has occurred. Interviews with sexual assault survivors should be treated as a crime scene. Crime scenes, at first glance, may present certain assumptions about what happened. Trained investigators will process the crime scene for additional clues and follow all of the evidence, even if the significance of the clue is not obvious at the time.

The same is true for victim interviews. After helping victims recall and share details about their sexual assault, the Investigator pieces these details together with other information and evidence, to compile a linear and evidence-based account of the crime.

FIRST, DO NO HARM: RECOGNIZING AND RESPONDING TO TRAUMA

Trauma is a direct result of the abuse and exploitation that offenders inflict on victims of intimate partner violence, sexual assault, and human trafficking victims through the use of tactics including force, fraud, and coercion. This acute trauma often compounded with historical trauma, impacts survivor's ability to fully participate in the criminal justice process. As a result, a collaborative, trauma-informed response is essential to ensuring survivor access to justice while improving community safety.

This presentation will describe various forms of trauma that victims may experience throughout their lives and as a result of an offender's victimization. The Presenter will define cultural humility as a key element of a successful trauma-informed approach that improves our(cont.)

individual and systematic response to survivors. Additionally, the presenter will provide strategies to identify, document, and introduce evidence of trauma to improve case outcomes and community safety by holding offenders accountable.

At the conclusion of this training, participants will be better able to:

- Identify signs and symptoms of trauma, and implement trauma-informed practices
- Enhance victim safety, privacy, autonomy, and participation through collaboration with allied professionals
- Practice cultural humility while preparing cases to proceed, regardless of a victim's ability to participate in the process

Trauma-Informed Interviewing: Turning Understanding into Outcomes

You've learned about trauma and its affects, now what? How do you translate that knowledge into outcomes for victims, achieve justice and be trauma-informed, and work with victims who need help but refuse to cooperate with law enforcement? How do you get victims to share their stories so the legal system can begin getting them justice – whether through a criminal conviction or a protective order? In the crime of domestic violence and sexual assault, the victim is often also the only “witness” to the crime. This carries with its inherent problems of recall and testimony as memories are stored differently when someone is under extreme stress.

Prosecutors need to know what happened to pursue a criminal case and civil attorneys must be able to articulate incidences of violence to get protective orders. However, victims of domestic violence and sexual assault are often unable to tell their story in a clear timeline and with the kind of consistency that the law requires. Victims who cannot tell their story have a significant barrier to getting help through the legal system. This workshop will focus on best practices for trauma-informed interviewing of victims to retrieve memories of incidences of violence that can be used by law enforcement, prosecutors, and civil attorneys in getting victims justice.

Topics will include a brief overview of trauma and its relationship to memory storage and recall, examples from actual cases where trauma-informed interviewing produced concrete information that was used in court, information on interacting with victims who are resistant to prosecuting the batterer, creating a timeline and most importantly how to ask questions so victims can retrieve the answers.

As a result of this session, participants will be better able to:

- Describe the challenges with memory storage and recall of traumatic events.
- Summarize the value that trauma-informed interviewing affords to both victims and law enforcement.
- Facilitate a trauma-informed interview that produces high-value information.
- Recognize that a non-cooperative victim is in the first stages of a trauma-informed interview that may be conducted over a longer period of time.

"What's Your Story" : Law Enforcement and the LGBTQ+ community working together to hold perpetrators accountable.

Law enforcement's response to LGBTQ+ survivors of gender-based crime can have lifelong effects, either positive or negative. A negative response can have dire consequences for the victim and the community in general. Feelings of distrust and negativity toward law enforcement can reverberate throughout the community and damage that communities' faith in the criminal justice system. On the other hand, a positive, constructive response can save lives and build trust within the community. LGBTQ+ survivors will be more likely to report when they feel they are treated with a non-biased approach that demonstrates respect, understanding, and dignity. This session will provide law enforcement and victim service providers with an opportunity to explore information about the LGBTQ+ communities they serve, provide techniques to improve and enhance their response to this diverse community, and examine ways in which developing a respectful engagement with this community can assist agencies in the overall goal of reducing gender bias in policing. Officers will be challenged to open up to new thinking, new insights, and new ways of doing police work, which includes an understanding on how past practices damaged relations with this community.

Participants will receive a compendium of tools and resources adopted by various departments and victim advocates from across the country which have encouraged a healthy, strong relationship between law enforcement and the LGBTQ+ communities they serve. As a result of this session, participants will be better able to:

- Explore the unique issues related to working with LGBTQ+ communities and the ways hate crimes, domestic violence and sexual assault impact the community.
- Identify respectful terminology used to describe sexual orientation and gender identity and learn how to appropriately document interactions with LGBTQ+ identified individuals in reports, affidavits and other system documents.
- Determine best practices for bridging the divide and forging trusting relationships between law enforcement and the LGBTQ+ community.
- Assess agency opportunities to improve police engagement with the community.
